Excerpt: .more in terms of nature he expresses the sureness of his faith. The thought of the marshhen setting up her tiny home on the bosom of the limitless spaces of nature seems to have the virtue of freeing his soul from all disturbing doubts and disheartening fears, from all the teasing, perplexing problems of life, and of anchoring his faith securely in the boundless goodness of God. And few poets have more nobly sung this final achievement of the spirit's loftiest aspiration when, eased of the pain of its struggle, it rests after victory: Oh, what is abroad in the marsh and the terminal sea? Somehow my soul seems suddenly free From the weighing of fate and the sad discussion of sin, By the length and the breadth and the sweep of the marshes of Glynn. Ye marshes, how candid and simple and nothing-withholding...
