Not illustrated. 1878 Excerpt: . . . THE MIRACLE AT LOUftDES, oir September 16th, 1877. Chapter The First. I. bOWAEDS the month of August, 1874, arrived at Lourdes, Monsieur the Canon Martignon, retired Cure, Archpriest of Algeria. He was a man of about forty years. Attacked on the African soil with an entire loss of voice, and an affection of the chest, he had cleared himself from the Mediterranean, and come to the city of Mary, attracted by the fame of the miracles accomplished at the Grotto, and hoping that he also might obtain a share in these extraordinary graces. At the rocks of Massabielle he knelt and prayed; he drank of the miraculous stream; he plunged himself in the Piscina: but the desired cure did not come down from heaven. Never mind, said be to himself; we will not be discouraged. So short an intercession is not enough. One must rap many times at the door, that she may open to those who wish to enter. We will make a novena. The novena was made, but no amelioration followed. The faith of the canon did not fail, neither did his hope. I will make a novena of weeks. Behold him therefore at Lourdes for sixty-three days. Ou the sixty-fourth day, finding himself in exactly the same state, he went to spend some time at Pau, seeking in the mildness of that climate some momentary alleviation. But he reproached himself for this flight from Lourdes as a weakness and a lack...
